City Council Reaffirms Commitment To Diversity and Community Pledge

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

On Thursday, February 13, Greenbelt City Council shared a letter to residents. “The past few weeks have been a time of fear and uncertainty for many Greenbelt residents,” reads the letter, which reaffirms their commitment to a diverse population and to being a respectful and welcoming community. It comes as the Trump administration brands diversity, equity, inclusion and accessibility (DEIA) programs and positions as “anti-constitutional” and “discrimination,” terminating DEIA requirements and positions in the federal government and directing “strong action to end private sector DEIA discrimination, including civil compliance investigations.” Trump has also taken aim at immigrants, in particular, expanding Immigration and Customs Enforcement’s (ICE) reach to include previously sensitive locations: schools, places of worship and hospitals, and expanding expedited removals, pledging mass deportations, characterizing immigrants as criminal and even targeting birthright citizenship. Council’s letter of commitment to a diverse population comes as private companies, even those without donations or ties to the current administration, divest themselves of DEIA programs.

The Community Pledge

“Although the [community] pledge has been amended over the years to reflect our growing and changing community and values, the spirit has remained the same,” says council’s letter.

The pledge reads: “The strength of Greenbelt is diverse people living together in a spirit of cooperation. We celebrate all people. By sharing together all are enriched. We strive to be a respectful, welcoming community that is open, accessible, safe and fair.”

Black History Month

A Greenbelt African American Family in Slavery and Freedom

by Alan Virta

Not much is known of the personal histories of the enslaved African Americans who lived and worked on the farms and plantations that now are Greenbelt. Their family relationships are hard to trace over time, because in most records enslaved people were identified only by their first names. There is one such family from Greenbelt, however, whose history can be traced. They were the Waters family:

Vachel and Flora Waters and their children. Vachel and Flora met while enslaved in Greenbelt but gained their freedom here too.

Susannah Turner's inventory from estate papers lists the four older children of Vachel and Flora Waters: Benjamin, Greenbury, James and Airey.

enslavers became their emancipators as well. It was only after they and their children were freed early in the 19th century that their surnames were finally entered into the public record, enabling us to go both forward and backward in time to reconstruct their family history.

The key to unlocking their family history was found in the District of Columbia’s Register of Free Negroes, a record created to serve as proof for free Blacks that they were indeed free, not enslaved. Five siblings named Waters registered between 1827 and 1831, two of whom were explicitly identified as children of Vachel and Flora

Local Families Cite Struggles With Staggering Utility Bills

by Cathie Meetre

Despite complaints about bills on local social media, the utilities Town Hall meeting of February 18 wasn’t well-attended by residents up in arms (see the meeting report on page 11). City staff and utility and state government representatives outnumbered residents.

Pepco shows a noticeable increase in rates between last winter and this. Coupled with a cold snap, the impact is significant and especially so for Greenbelt Homes, Inc. (GHI) residents, most of whose homes are all electric.

companies make in maintaining, repairing or improving the grid (poles, wires, substations, etc.). Supply is the actual cost of the power. For electricity, all these costs have been rising and companies have also been permitted by the Maryland Public Service Commission to recoup their infrastructure

See UTILITY BILLS, page 11

Huge Bills

On the Greenbelters’ Facebook page, residents complain of recent bills over $700 and up to nearly $1,000 even while barely staying warm. Residents who elected to continue using the resistance (baseboard) heaters – which use about four times the energy as the heat pump solution – were particularly hard hit as temperatures plummeted.

A Complicated Picture

Monthly electric bills are comprised of a delivery fee and a supply fee both based on the amount of energy used, plus a customer charge that is a smaller flat fee. There are also local taxes and multiple surcharges that relate to infrastructure investment and the cost of efficiency incentives. Delivery fees include the investments utility

County Executive Candidates Respond to FD Staffing Crisis

by Diya Shah and Ryan Colasanti

The Greenbelt News Review asked candidates running for the position of Prince George’s County Executive their stance on the staffing crisis and leadership within the Prince George’s County Fire Department. We received responses from six of the remaining 11 candidates.

Last June Fire Chief Tiffany Green reallocated 55 firefighters from stations in Prince George’s County to combat staff shortages. This included 24 career firefighters from Greenbelt Fire Station 35. Following the reassignment, the impacted communities complained of increasing response times and decreased services to their areas. What was supposed to be a temporary reallocation plan remains in effect, with Greenbelt residents and leaders continuing to express concern and frustration.

We asked the candidates, “As County Executive, would you commit to returning career staff to Greenbelt? How do you plan to address the staffing crisis in the Prince George’s County Fire Department, and do you plan to change the leadership of the department?”

Lament for Transparency

With increasing frequency, spokespersons for county bodies from the fire department to the schools decline to answer questions from the public and the press. Last year a Public Information Officer from the Prince George’s County Fire Department directed members of the public attending a town hall, as well as our city government and our paper, to file Maryland Public Information Act (MPIA) requests for various information we sought. In the fall, our request of Prince George’s County Homeland Security to know average 911 hold times was met with direction to file an MPIA request. Two weeks ago, simple questions to Prince George’s County Public Schools about plans to renegotiate a contract or to continue to work with a company were swiftly rebuffed with instructions to, you guessed it, file an MPIA. This, despite the fact that future plans can’t be found in past records.

The News Review has filed a fair number of MPIAs over the last year, in particular. They require time to submit and usually a three-month wait for a reply. When seeking documents, this seems a reasonable procedure, though it’s frequently also used to stall the sharing of information. However, when instruction to file an MPIA becomes the standard answer to almost any question posed to county bodies, it gives us pause to wonder why public officials are averse to sharing information willingly, to standing behind or explaining their decisions. Is there an unusual level of obstruction and lack of transparency at play in our county? What is the future role of Public Information Officers who are not obliged to return calls and direct enquiries to the MPIA process?

What is lost in making MPIAs the standard procedure for any question is the ability to have conversations, to understand perspectives and greater context not found in narrowly answered legal requests or in the documents and records they produce. What’s also lost is the chance to inform the public in a timely manner and to build trust.

As Prince George’s County prepares to elect a new county executive, we hope the winner will plan to lead us toward transparency and will bring a willingness to answer questions the public and press have a right to ask.

USAID Reporting

I have been very pleased with the reporting on USAID and thank Anna Bedford-Dillow and the Greenbelt News Review team. We don’t know if the laundry list of payments is real, nor do we know the context for any of them, but Elon Musk stated at his recent news conference that the condoms went to Gaza, a province in Mozambique – not Gaza in Palestine – to reduce the spread of AIDS. Hopefully, the American people will learn the truth one day soon. For now, continue to keep us up to date from the perspective of those who worked for that agency as we watch history (from 1939) repeat itself.

The community pledge grew out of controversy decades ago. It was drafted by the Community Relations Advisory Board (CRAB) in 1997 in response to a hate flyer distributed in the city. It was then signed by over 700 community members, whose signatures were collected at the Labor Day Festival that year; their names were printed in the News Review (see page 7 of the October 23, 1997, issue). The Community Pledge was adopted in 1997, revised in 2001 and again modified in 2018 (see page 8 of the December 6, 2018, issue).

Council’s letter to residents this month stated: “The City Council remains firm in our commitment to the Community Pledge and the values behind it, to being a respectful and welcoming community that celebrates all our residents and treats everyone with dignity, regardless of race, ethnicity, disability, religious beliefs, sexual orientation, gender identity or immigration status.”

Sharing Resources

City staff have provided a compilation of resources to inform residents of their rights, states the letter, and those are available on the city’s website and will also be shared via CARES. The letter was published in English and Spanish, and linked to immigration resources.

No Immigration Tracking

The letter emphasizes that through city offerings, such as food distribution, senior assistance and counseling, staff will never ask about immigration status, nor track U.S. residency. The Greenbelt Police Department “is not responsible for enforcing immigration laws and does not assist with federal immigration enforcement activities. They will never ask for your immigration status. Please do not be afraid to report criminal activity or reach out for assistance,” the letter stated.

A “commitment to making Greenbelt a community welcoming of diversity ... will continue to be a guide for all decisions of the Greenbelt City Council as we consider policies, legal options and resource allocation in these unprecedented and challenging times,” concluded the letter from council.

The letter was published after it was submitted by Councilmember Jenni Pompei at the February 10 council meeting. It was unanimously approved by council.

Greenbelt USAID Worker Update

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

The Greenbelt workers we interviewed in the February 5 issue are still employed by USAID, one reinstated from administrative leave and another not placed on it, presumably due to a judge’s order halting the administration’s actions. The contractor we spoke with had been told he would have his access restored last week but still has no access to USAID email or systems. “I am still in a valid contract and I have not heard anything (notification) regarding contract cancellation,” he told the News Review on Tuesday, February 18. He was paid this week (his pay cycle is for a two-week period with a delay of one week).

The wall becomes a symbol of racism and hate to Buggin’ Out and to other people in the neighborhood, and tensions rise.

PUBLIC STATEMENT REGARDING PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY FIRE/EMS SUMMER STAFFING PLAN FOR GREENBELT VOLUNTEER FIRE DEPARTMENT

Greenbelt, MD - The City of Greenbelt is disappointed in the County's decision to reassign 24 career personnel from Greenbelt Station 835 on July 1, resulting in the removal of all career personnel from our Station. County Fire Chief Tiffany Green and County leadership ordered the redeployment of 55 career firefighters from Berwyn Heights, Greenbelt, Bunker Hill, and Bowie Station. We are gravely concerned with the impact in response times of emergencies in Greenbelt and our surrounding areas.

Black History Month

Greenbelt Recreation Highlights Leaders of Labor and Civil Rights

by Lois Rosado

Each year the Greenbelt Black History and Culture Committee highlights Black American dignitaries who represent the theme of Black History Month. This year’s theme is African Americans and Labor, as designated by the Association for the Study of African American Life and History (ASALH), the organization founded by Dr. Carter G. Woodson. Thanks to LaToya Fisher from the Recreation Department, pictures and biographies about the four highlighted individuals can be seen weekly on posters in one of Recreation’s facilities (Aquatics & Fitness Center, Community Center, Youth Center, Springhill Lake Recreation Center); the posters are shifted between buildings. So, stop, read and learn.

Luminaries

A. Philip Randolph

A. Phillip Randolph, 1889-1979, is best known for organizing the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters union and demanding better working conditions and pay from the Pullman Railroad Company. Randolph was also a key architect of the March on Washington for Jobs and Justice in 1963, which helped usher in the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. He was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom by former president Lyndon B. Johnson.

Callie House

Callie House, 1861-1928, is known for campaigning for Reparation/Pensions for formerly enslaved individuals. As a homemaker, House worked as a washerwoman and seamstress. In 1891 she read a pamphlet called the Freedmen’s Pension Bill: A Plea for American Freedmen. This pamphlet called for pensions and reparations for formerly enslaved people, who were promised 40 acres and a mule, an ordinance blocked by President Andrew Johnson as the Jim-Crow era expanded. House joined Rev. Isaiah Dickerson, a teacher and minister, and formed the National Ex-Slave Mutual Relief Bounty and Pension Association (MRB&PA). They organized formerly enslaved people in North Carolina, Missouri and Louisiana and advocated on behalf of those needing health care, burial costs and pensions for their elder years. Learn what happened when reading her poster. House was a fascinating woman who laid the historical seeds for the current reparations movement.

Bayard Rustin in 1963

Bayard Rustin, 1912-1987, is known for co-establishing the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and for serving as a close advisor to Dr. Martin Luther King. He helped King organize the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC). Within a span of two months, Rustin enabled SCLC to galvanize for the March on Washington in 1963. Rustin was posthumously awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 2013. I had the honor of working with Rustin as a member of the Young Adults NAACP Brooklyn chapter, and he helped us organize a citywide school boycott in a conjunction with CORE. The purpose was to ensure that African Americans were appointed to and represented on New York City’s school board. He was inspirational and knew how to lift spirits with song and praise when the work became challenging. The man was an awesome community organizer, who knew how to encourage and motivate people to move forward with determination and purpose.

Gloria Richardson in 1964

Gloria Richardson Dandridge, 1922-2021, was from Baltimore and later lived in Cambridge, Md., in Dorchester County. During World War II, Dandridge worked for the federal government but after the war ended, she returned to Cambridge and could not find employment. It was not until the 1960s that she became engaged with the employment and civil rights movement and founded the Cambridge Nonviolent Action Committee (CNAC). Her organization led desegregation campaigns in housing, schools and jobs. She was one of the first women to head a major civil rights organization.

Take a moment and read more about these remarkable Americans when visiting the posters located in the Recreation buildings.

Waters. Testifying on their behalf was a white man named Benjamin K. Morsell, a merchant, judge and politician in Washington who had a country home in Greenbelt (Montebello, near the water tower).

The involvement of Morsell suggested the Waters family’s Greenbelt connection. The proof of that was found in the probate records of Samuel Turner, whose family cemetery is preserved on Ivy Lane. He lived at Turner’s Discovery, along Ridge Road, just east of Morsell’s home. He conditionally emancipated “Vachal” in his will in 1801. The relevant provision reads: “I bequeath to my wife Susanna ... my Negro man named Vachal for the term of eight years and then to be free.” Turner’s subsequent estate inventory listed both a Vachel (age 24) and a Flora (no age given), almost certainly the same couple with the surname Waters named years later in the D.C. records.

It is fair to ask what moved Turner to emancipate Vachel. We can only speculate. Turner was a Methodist, a denomination which at that time was intensifying its opposition to slavery. Also, the labor-intensive tobacco economy was on the wane in northern Prince George’s County. Slave labor was not needed for the crops replacing tobacco. Turner’s estate inventory, in fact, listed no crops at all. He raised livestock and operated a blacksmithing business. Whether it was a sense of justice, religious conviction, economic realism or something else that caused Turner to free Vachel Waters is lost to history.

How did Vachel and Flora Waters come to the Turner household? The documentary record is clear for Flora, less so for Vachel.

Flora came to Greenbelt from the household of John Chew Thomas, a former Congressman. Thomas’ wife Mary Snowden inherited part of Snowden’s Discovery, a sprawling tract of land in Greenbelt. They already had a home in Anne Arundel County, so they sold off Snowden’s Discovery in several parcels. The buyer of one of the parcels in 1800 was Turner. Along with the land, Turner and his wife Susanna hired Flora from Thomas. Flora was “in possession of the widow Turner” (though still owned by Thomas) when Thomas emancipated her and her four children by a deed of manumission in 1810. So the evidence indicates that Vachel and Flora met in the household of the Turners of Greenbelt. Whether Thomas emancipated Flora in 1810 in response to Vachel’s emancipation is not known. He conditionally emancipated more than 30 other enslaved men, women and children at the same time. Religion might have played a role, for he was a Quaker, another anti-slavery sect.

Vachel’s path to the Turners was less direct. It started at Jericho, a tobacco plantation on the Patuxent River near old Bowie. Jericho was owned by John Waters (1698-1774), one of the largest slaveholders in northern Prince George’s County. When his estate was inventoried, 12 enslaved people were named, including a man named Vachel (age 21) and a woman named Rachel (age 19). Rachel’s name next appears 11 years later (age 30) in 1786 on the estate inventory of Waters’ daughter Mary Waters Williams. A widow who owned no land herself, Mary seems to have lived her later years on the upper reaches of Beaverdam Creek in what is now the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center, where her adult sons owned plantations. Besides Rachel, four enslaved children also appeared on Mary’s estate inventory. The oldest was named Vachel (age 8). He most likely was the same 24-year-old Vachel on Samuel Turner’s inventory 16 years later. Why he moved from the Williams household to Turner’s is not known, but the families knew each other. Williams’ son John was a partner with Samuel Turner in the blacksmithing business.

The Waters family story is not as simple as a family enslaved and then freed. Vachel and Flora had four children before they were emancipated, meaning those children were born into slavery. John Chew Thomas emancipated Flora immediately, but he set conditions on her children’s freedom: her boys Benjamin, Greenbury and James at age 28, daughter Ariana at age 25. So even though Vachel and Flora became free in 1809 and 1810, their four eldest children (all then below the age of eight) were not. When Susanna Turner died in 1819, they were listed on her estate inventory. When her estate was liquidated, their remaining terms of service were purchased by Susanna’s children and their neighbor Benjamin K. Morsell. From the D.C. Register of Free Negroes we know that Vachel and Flora had at least two more children born after they became free, Peter and Elizabeth. Those children, unlike their older siblings, were thus born free. The household was a mixed one of both free and enslaved members.

Five of Vachel and Flora Waters’ children relocated to Washington, D.C. The child whose life is best documented is their eldest daughter Ariana (usually called Airy), born enslaved. Her term of servitude did not end until about 1830, when Morsell vouched for her free status. Her freedom certificate reads: “Airy was born the property of Susanah Turner of Prince George’s County, Maryland, with whom she served until Turner’s death [1819], and then was purchased by Morsell. She has finished her time of servitude in Washington with Morsell and is free.”

By then Ariana was married to a man named William Dodson and her name was Ariana Dodson. She appears as a free woman and the head of a household in the 1840, 1850 and 1860 censuses for the District of Columbia. In the 1862 Washington city directory she is listed as the widow of William Dodson, occupation washer woman. An older woman named F. Waters was living with her in 1850, possibly her mother Flora from Greenbelt. No further record of Ariana has been found after 1862. The stories of Vachel and Flora Waters’ other children have not yet been traced.

The Waters family story in Greenbelt and Washington is far from complete. We know nothing of their inner lives, their hopes, fears, joys, heartbreaks or aspirations. But the fragmentary details that have been recorded present a glimpse into the lives of an enslaved African American family whose paths to freedom were set in motion in Greenbelt.

He also wrote Chapter 1: Prologue for the book Greenbelt, History of a New Town: 1937-1987, Mary Lou Williamson, editor, published by Donning in 1987, telling the story of who lived in the area that became Greenbelt. He served as a member of the Greenbelt 50th Anniversary Committee, on the board of directors of Friends of the Greenbelt Museum and as editor of the monthly newsletter of the Prince George’s County Historical Society. A lifelong county resident, Virta is a graduate of the University of Maryland and a member of the staff of the Library of Congress. COUNTY EXEC continued from page 1

Many of the candidates emphasized the need for improved recruitment efforts to enlist more firefighters and EMS personnel to help with the staffing shortage. Most candidates were non-committal on making any change to leadership until they could assess the situation for themselves, although candidate Tonya Sweat did say she would look to make a change in leadership if elected. Most said they'd work to reinstate the reallocated career firefighters.

Below are the candidates' responses.

Aisha Braveboy (Democrat)

As County Executive, I will review the leadership of the entire county public safety team, including the fire department. And yes, I would commit to returning career staff to Greenbelt, but all the while mindful of the current county budget crisis of $175 million and growing. In addressing the staffing crisis, we must pioneer new, better recruitment efforts, and begin to grow our next generation of career firefighters from here in the county, such as with the cadet firefighter program in our county school system.

Ron Hunt (Democrat)

Hunt's response was dictated over the phone and edited for length

I don't want to say I'm changing any leadership because I have not looked at him. I have only looked at other departments, which, if I am elected, I will change, but I have not addressed the fire department. I believe there's a reason why people were removed from different fire departments or different positions in different places. I need to know why. I know one thing for a fact – you have volunteer firefighters here, which are heroes. Then you got a lower number of firefighters that are being paid. And the question is, do we need more or less? My point is, I have to know why they let these people go. Now if they're doing it because they're saying it's a budgetary problem, the budgetary problem is the people that are doing it. They have no idea of how they're spending money. Now, I'm not a politician, nor do I want to be one. I've been doing business for many years, and there are certain things I don't put up with. All the candidates are saying it's not a popularity contest. But yeah, I'm very popular with the Black community, I am. I own the biggest nightclubs in the city for more than 30 years. What did the community want? Did the community want those firemen taken away? If they didn't, why are they gone? Give me a good reason. And if you're saying to me, because we can't afford them, if they were there at one point we could afford them. So why can't we afford them now?

George McDermott (Republican)

The Greenbelt volunteer fire department never should have been shut down. The reconstruction of the facility could've been done leaving the facility opened and operational. Even if it meant putting temporary trailers and living facilities on site during some of the renovations. The volunteer base and Greenbelt and all of the firehouses throughout the county is really the backbone that has protected our citizens.

The new County Executive needs to have an audit done regarding the planning cost, construction cost, relocation cost associated with the manpower reassignments. The public has a right to know, the firefighters have a right to know and especially the volunteers who started this fire station, I believe in 1947. Overall the county must do a better job of working with these volunteers and be grateful for their service.

Moisette Tonya Sweat (Democrat)

I believe a leadership change is necessary in the Fire/EMS Department. The department requires a fire chief who is committed to leading a combination system and permitting volunteer firefighters and emergency medical practitioners to augment the services provided by career personnel. While the human resources are limited, we must redistribute career first responders equally throughout the county to ensure we preserve life and property. I will also work with new leadership to improve recruiting of both career and volunteer first responders.

Alonzo Washington (Democrat)

As County Executive, I will address the staffing crisis in the Fire/EMS Department by prioritizing the return of career firefighters to Greenbelt and other affected stations. My plan includes accelerating recruitment efforts to fill the firefighter deficit and re-evaluating resource allocation strategies to avoid overburdening personnel. My administration will be data-driven, and I will conduct a thorough review of departments countywide to ensure our public safety needs are being met.

Jonathan White (Republican)

I am committed to reinstating career firefighters in Greenbelt and addressing the staffing challenges within Prince George's County Fire Department (PGFD). The removal of career staff from Greenbelt and other stations has created significant service gaps, posing risks to public safety. This decision, being short-sighted, must be reversed. To resolve the staffing crisis, I will prioritize firefighter recruitment and retention by offering competitive salaries, enhanced benefits and additional hiring incentives. I will collaborate with the County Council to secure the necessary funding for increasing personnel and ensuring that PGFD is adequately staffed to meet the rising service demands. Furthermore, I will initiate a leadership review of PGFD to assess if changes are required to improve morale, efficiency and decision-making. If leadership adjustments are essential to restore trust and efficacy, I will proceed accordingly.

My objective is to reconstruct a fire department that both residents and first responders can rely on.

Who Has the Money? County Executive Candidates Report

by Kit Slack, Streetcar Suburbs News

Candidates for Prince George's County Executive have filed their first campaign finance reports for the March 4 primary election race.

Below, candidates are listed from the highest campaign account balance to the lowest. This snapshot is based on campaign finance reports filed by the February 4 deadline and a review of contributions in December and January.

To take a more detailed look at contributions to candidates, search the state campaign finance website at campaignfinance.maryland.gov/Public/ViewReceiptsMain.

Aisha Braveboy

Prince George's County State's Attorney Aisha Braveboy had about $379,000 in her campaign account as of January 28 and had raised about $325,000 from 375 donors since December 1. Braveboy spent far more than any other candidate from January 9 to 28 – $200,000, including $25,000 on phone banking, over $100,000 on television ads and $6,000 on robocalls.

Braveboy's campaign received $6,000 from Corridor Wine in Laurel and at least $42,000 from members of the family of David Trone, the liquor magnate who lost to Angela Alsobrooks in the primary for the U.S. Senate seat last spring.

Braveboy also received at least $30,000 from donors in the health care industry, particularly home health care services, since December 1.

Northeast Maglev, which has been seeking approval for a high-speed train line through Prince George's County, contributed $5,000 to her campaign.

A political action committee called the We Are Labor 2 PAC contributed just over $79,000 to Braveboy's campaign on January 31, past the timeframe for reporting.

Calvin Hawkins

At-large County Councilmember Calvin Hawkins had about $192,000 in his campaign account on January 28. He had raised the most money from the largest number of donors since December 1, about $337,000 from nearly 600 donors. Over $50,000 came from 11 donors in the construction and real estate industries.

Hawkins spent a total of $116,000 from January 9 to 28, including $26,000 on printing, $25,000 on campaign staff and consultants, $23,000 on phone banking and $12,000 for office rental.

Rushern Baker

Former County Executive Rushern Baker had just under $97,000 in his campaign bank account on January 28 and had raised about $146,000 from about 260 donors since December 1. Three donors in security services gave a total of $12,000 to his campaign, and four donors in the real estate and construction industries gave a total of $13,500. Baker received an additional $6,000 from the campaign funds of County Councilmember Sidney Harrison (District 9) and also received donations of services for campaign texting and for video. Baker spent almost $44,000 on media and over $3,000 on compensation for campaign workers from January 9 to 28.

Alonzo T. Washington
State Senator Alonzo T. Washington (District 22) had $81,000 in his campaign bank account on January 28. Since December 1, he had raised about $37,000 from about 160 donors, most of them small donations from addresses in his district. The largest donation he received was $2,500 from the campaign of Bill Ferguson, a state legislator from Baltimore. Washington spent about $2,000 from January 9 to 28 on compensation for campaign workers.

Tonya Sweat
Moisette Tonya Sweat had about $11,000 in her campaign account on January 28. She had raised about $13,000 since December 1 from nearly 50 donors. She spent $1,600 between January 9 and 28 on media, printing and campaign materials. Her largest donations were $6,000 from Peter Oliver Kreuger, a consultant from Silver Spring and $2,000 from Joann McDonald, a Bowie resident and retired bookkeeper for Prince George's County Public Schools.

Ron Hunt
Ron Hunt had over $3,000 in his bank account on January 28 and had spent over $6,000 on direct mail since January 9. He made a loan of $9,500 to his campaign on January 13.

Marcellus Crews and Albert Slocum did not file the reports by the February 4 deadline, and their most recent campaign finance reports show minimal balances.

Republican Candidates
In heavily Democratic Prince George's County, Republican candidates are not raising much money. Jonathan White and George McDermott filed statements showing that contributions and expenditures for each of their campaigns were less than $1,000. Jesse Peed failed to file the report by the February 4 deadline, but an annual statement he filed January 15 shows a bank account balance under $1,000.

Fomalont said she experienced similar responses from another board member when the heat first failed in November 2024. She said that when she contacts elected officials, they always ask if she has contacted board members.

The News Review emailed Metropolis on February 1 inquiring about their plans to address Chelsea Wood's aging infrastructure, with no response received to date.

On February 13 resident Jocelyn Cox requested support in an email to state and county officials including Maryland State Senator Alonzo Washington, County Councilmember Eric Olson, their staff and the Prince George's Community Relations/Common Ownership Communities office. Her previous outreach to them (she estimated seven previous emails) produced no substantive results. Her February 13 email said, "Our complex is without heat again. ... I'm wondering if any assistance is available to us. If there is nothing, I'd rather be told that than be left in the dark."

She asked if bail-out programs exist for condominiums in financial ruin, writing, "I don't see an end in sight if the cause of our lack of heat (and potentially AC in the summer) is delinquency. Is there a precedent? And if you all are not the people to speak with, ... point me in the right direction!" She wrote to fellow residents "It doesn't seem like local/state officials are willing to help. ... Owners have been contacting officials since December, and it doesn't seem to make a difference."

City Notes

The city manager, CARES, Recreation and Police were briefed by the Maryland Field Office Director of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) regarding enforcement operations. The mayor, city manager and over 40 participants attended Greenbelt's Know Your Rights event featuring elected officials and CASA representatives.

The grant coordinator researched city grants impacted by the federal funding freeze and corresponded with federal and state representatives regarding this impact.

Economic Development helped two businesses with regulatory permitting and met with New Deal Café ownership about small business luncheons.

Recreation and Arts facilitated Artful Afternoons and other Black American History Month events. Springhill Lake Recreation Center welcomed Pre-K Bilingual Story Time and the Community Center hosted a blood drive.

Therapeutic Recreation took seniors to the National Museum of African American History and Culture and met with Mid-Atlantic Off-Road Enthusiasts about adaptive biking.

The CARES director testified at the Juvenile Services Budget hearing before the Maryland Senate Budget and Tax, Public Safety subcommittee.

investment costs faster, making delivery charges rise even more steeply.

For natural gas, billed similarly, delivery cost also reflects companies updating their infrastructure, but because the cost of natural gas itself has gone down the increase is less visible.

Electricity

Below, for comparison, we use the total of the bill Pepco and Washington Gas would send their customers.

The Office of the People’s Counsel, State of Maryland, showed that in 2024, a consumer using an average of 900 kWh per month with Pepco would pay ~$2,000 total for the year. For the same amount of power BGE would cost $1,900, Delmarva ~$2,100, Potomac Edison ~$1,320 and SMECO ~$1,470. Pepco, BGE and Delmarva are all subsidiaries of Chicago-based Exelon Corporation and all three are more expensive than Potomac Edison and SMECO – the other two companies serving Maryland.

SMECO is the Southern Maryland Electric Cooperative, formed in 1937. Potomac Edison did not increase its electricity prices from 1994 to 2018 though they have risen steadily since, but they are still only about 65 percent of Delmarva’s. Potomac Edison’s parent company has its own generating plants but the other companies purchase a much larger share of the power they distribute.

Why the Rise in Supply Costs?

Maryland has shut down several power stations in the last several years as it switches away from coal. As a result, more power must be bought from out-of-state generators, especially in extreme weather when both demand and prices are higher. The three Exelon companies buy most of their power, and though SMECO has its own solar farm it also purchases the majority of its power (but still keeps its prices down). Potomac Edison (owned by First Energy) generates its own power in Virginia and West Virginia and is less affected by prices on the open market.

Natural Gas Prices

A somewhat different story emerged with natural gas. Washington Gas, which serves Greenbelt, was the lowest-cost Maryland supplier on the basis of the total bill to consumers. The same Office of the People’s Counsel study cited above shows them at ~$1,100 for an annual household consumption of 940 therms (total bill). BGE and Columbia Gas both came in at ~$1,400 for the same level of consumption. This may, alas, be a Pyrrhic victory because Washington Gas is not upgrading its infrastructure at the same speed as the other utilities, which may mean that rapidly escalating delivery charges await in the future when it attempts to catch up.

Accelerating Energy Costs

The Office of the People’s Counsel study concludes that part of the reason for accelerating cost increases is that the utility companies are being allowed by state regulators to recoup increased infrastructure costs on an accelerated schedule. It recommends that this practice be discontinued. Additional power generation facilities in Maryland have also been cited as essential to keep prices down.

The information presented here is a small fraction of the study. The full report is available on the web at tinyurl.com/y8z6brbj.

Tuesday's Town Hall Offers Help With High Utility Bills

by Cathie Meetre

The Utility Providers Town Hall meeting on February 18 related little to the complaints rife on social media about high utility bills. All of the four organizations represented (Pepco, Maryland Department of Housing and Community Development Division of Energy, Maryland Energy Administration and WSSC) gave information about how to get help paying bills or replacing inefficient equipment but did not explain the steep escalation in Pepco electricity costs.

One point made was that the surcharge for EMPower that is part of the hike in the bills is what pays for many of the subsidies. So EMPower is essentially a tax on all electricity consumers to subsidize those who qualify for assistance rather than a contribution by the utility companies. In a perhaps bizarre twist, an individual whose income is too high to qualify can pay $700 to be admitted to the EMPower subsidies.

Those interested in assistance can go to Pepco.com and complete a questionnaire that will identify all programs for which they qualify via Pepco or other organizations. Other items that came up in the meeting will be dealt with in a subsequent article.

Youth Musical Production Of Secret Circus in March

by Leo Casalini

From left, Kira Wilkinson, Mari Loucaides, Caspaen Jackson, Hannah Baker and Levi Baker are among the 29 young actors in the 2025 Greenbelt Youth Musical, Secret Circus.

“Ladies and Gentlemen, boys and girls, welcome to the Circus Magnifique!” – all will be welcome and all will be amazed at this new show in town that’s fit to leave you dazed. The Greenbelt Youth Musical, an annual program going on its 26th anniversary, has once again come around. This year’s installment: Secret Circus.

A story set in the 1940s in Eastern Europe during the Second World War, Secret Circus follows a band of outcasts, unusuals and prodigies all set on crossing the border. That’s the only chance one would have at escaping the wrath of the Paper Dolls, which is sure to beset all who choose to stay. But even life doesn’t stop for war and for a troupe, the majority of whom are young performers, one can often eclipse the other. As personal spats threaten overall survival, the circus must learn what it means to stick together if they are to have a chance of reaching their ultimate goal of getting to safety.

The Youth Musical has long been beloved by its many alumni, a notion that was reinforced by Shawford Jackson, a returning actor in this year’s production. He said that last year’s show was the highlight of his year. Jackson wishes the program could be held more than once per year, saying

“This is a space where I can just be myself,” a very similar sentiment to that of the circus.

Vying to be truly understood and loved for who they are, the misfits are simply people after all, despite a few additional quirks. And when it’s truly looked at, how sure can one be that life, in its own way, isn’t its own circus, fit with its own eight billion clowns, an endless menagerie of animals and spectacles galore? Shouldn’t simply existing guarantee you a right to join in the act? That is the question of Secret Circus.

All performances will be held in the Community Center gym, with showings on Saturday, March 1 at 7 p.m.; Sunday, March 2 at 3 p.m.; and Saturday, March 8 at 2 and 7 p.m. Tickets are available for purchase at the Community Center’s business office. Productions have a record of selling out quickly, so purchasing sooner rather than later is recommended.

Presidents Day Protesters Gather In D.C., Annapolis, Greenbelt

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

On Monday, February 17, a federal holiday in honor of Presidents Day, many people gathered in the nation’s capital and elsewhere in protest. While some Greenbelters headed to D.C. and Annapolis, some protested closer to home. At noon, approximately 35 people assembled in front of the Municipal Building, holding signs, waving to cars at the intersection and singing.

With a tambourine accompaniment, there were tuneful renditions of This Land Is My Land, If I Had a Hammer and We Are Climbing Jacob’s Ladder, among others. Signs proclaimed, Defend Democracy, Say No to President Musk, Stand Up GOP, Not My President, Neither Is Our President, Billionaires Fear the People: Let’s Prove Them Right, and more than one Honk for Freedom! Many cars did honk, as did a bus. Drivers and passengers waved and pumped fists and the gathered group cheered despite the fierce wind.

One attendee said she was there in support of the 14th Amendment, which guarantees birthright citizenship, equal protection under the law and due process, among other things. She expressed frustration over divisiveness and wanted people united for democracy. The Greenbelt protesters expressed concern over executive overreach as well as checks and balances for federal workers and for immigrants. One attendee at the rally was also concerned for the arts and for the workers at the Kennedy Center. Another protester, Melanie, was part of a group called Third Act, which she described as an alliance of people over age 60 interested in defending democracy; she’d been at a Tesla dealership protesting against Elon Musk over the weekend.

After almost an hour, the protesters marched from the Municipal Building to Roosevelt Center, where a photo of the group was taken near the Mother and Child statue before they disbanded.

Point of View

Hearing from the Unseen: Commitment to Community

by Susan Taylor

Greenbelt is an historic community with a mixed past. And, it is a contemporary city with a growing and deepening commitment to all who live here.

Greenbelt has a blossoming population of all generations and has been designated as a NORC – naturally occurring retirement community – a place where people age in place.

Greenbelt’s Pledge

“The greatness of a community is most accurately measured by the compassionate actions of its members,” observed Coretta Scott King.

Greenbelt’s Community Pledge states: “The strength of Greenbelt is diverse people living together in a spirit of cooperation. We celebrate all people. By sharing together all are enriched. We strive to be a respectful, welcoming community that is open, accessible, safe and fair.”

Recreation Builds Community

Unlike other jurisdictions in Maryland, Prince George’s County does not share after-school access to school buildings and outdoor amenities. Local communities like Greenbelt must construct and maintain separate facilities and programs to meet the wide needs of their population.

The Greenbelt Recreation Department is creative, visionary and practical in aiming “not only to enrich the individual, but to help build community.”

Constructing each seasonal menu of activities to reach into the city’s neighborhoods with limited resources takes skill, imagination and consideration. Greenbelt Recreation offers activities in history, arts, sports, camps and special events for individuals and groups across life spans and experience spans.

The recent exploration of resources – looking for possible pool capacity in Greenbelt East and Greenbelt West to support those who swim, from babies to elders – is just one example of the flexible intelligence and caring of Recreation leadership.

Recreation for All

One of the unseen, or underseen, segments of Greenbelt’s recreation-using population are folks living with limited mobility, disabilities, chronic illnesses and disease. Members of this cohort recently discussed their use of, and dependence upon, the literally life-saving pool.

Amber Massey declared, “I can’t function without the pool. I use it for physical therapy and pain relief and community. It keeps me strong so it’s easier to get around.”

“The pool helps to maintain physical as well as mental well-being for our entire community,” said Cathy Rodgers. Karen Hess spoke of the well-known benefits of regular exercise “for medical and social well-being.” Rodgers added, “From core strengthening to mind, body and soul, it serves as a catalyst to uplift our spirits. I have met so many wonderful people at the pool over these past 20 years.”

“The pool has made a tremendous effect on my life,” mentioned Katie Hagins. “The employees bend over backward to help me. The ability to swim is saving my life and making me healthier every day.”

“[Greenbelt Recreation] staff and patrons are like a family that has made my life so much better than I thought it could be,” praised Hagins. Hess inserted, “Our pool community takes care of each other!”
